This Suicide Prevention Training Series is presented through the National Strategy of Suicide Prevention in New Mexico, SAMHSA grant, in collaboration with the University of New Mexico, Department of Psychiatry and Behavioral Sciences, Division of Community Behavioral Health, and the State of New Mexico, Human Services Department, Behavioral Health Services Division and Indian Health Services.

About the Presenters:

Jan Fawcett, MD, is a psychiatrist and professor at the University of New Mexico Department of Psychiatry and Behavioral Sciences and considered a leading national expert in treatment and assessment of suicide risk, and the management of treatment resistant mood disorders. He obtained his MD from Yale University, and completed a fellowship at the National Institute of Mental Health. He serves on the scientific council for the American Foundation for Suicide Prevention and has more than 40 years' experience providing clinical care, consultation on treatment resistant depression and suicide prevention. He served on the DSM-5 Task Force for Mood Disorders and has authored and co-authored many publications, and served as the principle investigator of numerous studies on depression and anti-depression medication. His areas of special interest include research and treatment of affective disorders; depression; recurrent depression prevention with medication and CBT; suicide prevention; and psychopharmacology.

Lucas Dunklee, MD, is a general psychiatrist and assistant professor in the University of New Mexico Department of Psychiatry and Behavioral Sciences. He completed his MD at the University of Hawaii's John A. Burns School of Medicine, and his general psychiatry residency at the University of New Mexico. He served as chief resident for outpatient services and was awarded the Rosenbaum prize for resident research. His clinical practice is focused on providing both psychotherapy and advanced psychopharmacology to patients with severe mood disorders. His other interests include resident medical education and clinical research into emerging medications for mood disorders.
